PornHub Pretty Much Deletes All Content After Major Credit Cards Blacklist the Site

In a move that not a single conservative that I have seen even acknowledge, the largest online pornography site PornHub has deleted all content that was not uploaded by verified users. This really is unprecedented, and can't imagine there won't be other sites that follow suit in the near future.

> As part of our policy to ban unverified uploaders, we have now also suspended all previously uploaded content that was not created by content partners or members of the Model Program. This means every piece of Pornhub content is from verified uploaders, a requirement that platforms like Facebook, Instagram, TikTok, YouTube, Snapchat and Twitter have yet to institute. Leading non-profit organizations and advocacy groups acknowledge our efforts to date at combating illegal content have been effective. Over the last three years, Facebook self-reported 84 million instances of child sexual abuse material. During that same period, the independent, third-party Internet Watch Foundation reported 118 incidents on Pornhub. That is still 118 too many, which is why we are committed to taking every necessary action.

Can someone explain to me why a porn site is more morally upright than Facebook? 84 millions versus 118! Wow, just wow. This is no doubt a move that was in reaction to both Visa and MasterCard suspending the ability to complete transactions on the site.

> Visa's announcement specifically stated it would drop all of the Mindgeek network, which includes a number of adult sites, including Redtube, Youporn, XTube, and Brazzers.

PornHub hosted about 13.5 million videos, which is actually a lot less than I would've imagined, and some estimate the number has now dropped to less than half, thanks to the purge of unverified accounts. Porn actors are now fearing that the suspension of credit card use will affect their income.

> Following the credit card companies' decision to dump Pornhub, some sex workers fear not just a blow to their income, but to the adult industry as a whole if payment processors target smaller platforms next.

Imagine that, porn actors and right-wing dissidents are in the same financial situation of deplatforming, the latter being the only ones who should be receiving an income for their work actually. Now we just need to deleted PornHub itself.
